Part A: Original Media Analysis

Media Sample 1:

- Title of Media Text: Poverty & Education // Social Awareness Campaign
- Type (Movie Scene / Advertisement / Billboard): Billboard
- Creator/Brand: Shivani Nallainathan

1. What is happening in the original media?

The billboard shows a poor child sitting in a harsh environment while holding books and wearing a backpack. There is a contrast between the child's surroundings and his school items, which clearly highlights the gap between education and poverty. The design of the billboard suggests that even though the child wants to learn, he is unable to do so due to poverty.

2. What message is being communicated?

The billboard communicates that poverty prevents many children from accessing education. It emphasizes that every child should have the right to education, regardless of their financial condition. It also encourages people to recognize educational inequality as a serious social issue and support affected children.

3. Identify issues in the media (tick or explain):

- ☐ Stereotypes
- ☐ Unrealistic expectations
- ☐ Gender bias
- ☐ Lack of diversity
- ☐ Misleading information
- ☒ Other: Poor readability and lack of content

Explanation:

The billboard includes useful visuals, but the text is too small and difficult to read. The title placement is awkward and partially cut off, making it less visually appealing. It also lacks a clear call to action, such as a donation number or website. As a result, viewers may understand the issue but do not have an immediate way to respond or contribute.

Media Sample 2:

- Title of Media Text: Poverty and Education
- Type (Movie Scene / Advertisement / Billboard): Public Service Announcement
- Creator/Brand: TCF

1. What is happening in the original media?

In the Original Media an announcement is given where a girl talks about her future and basically that announcement enforces about the donation for the studies of the poor and needy students who are leaving studies just because of lack of affordability.

2. What message is being communicated?

The message being communicated is that the future of children; who can't afford the fees of school are getting out at a high rate can be changed if every person motivates himself to donate for those kids. A motivation to help those students who also want to secure a bright future is given.

3. Identify issues in the media (tick or explain):

- ☐ Stereotypes
- ☐ Unrealistic expectations
- ☐ Gender bias
- ☐ Lack of diversity
- ☐ Misleading information
- ☐ Other: lack of media accessibility

Explanation:

Because radio can reach a bigger audience as radio is being played on different mediums making it easier to transfer the message . Furthermore, The radio message is more clear and easy to understand than the PSA ;Although the PSA contains visual elements, the radio is considered to be more reachable and explicitly explains the problem .

Part B: Recreation Planning

Media Sample 1:

1. What will you change and why?

In the original billboard, the issue was not clearly stated. In our version, we have provided a clear title along with detailed content explaining the issue. Additionally, we have included statistics that were not present in the original, showing how many people are affected by this issue each year. This helps create a better understanding of the problem.

2. How will your version be more:

- Responsible: Our version is more responsible because it includes statistics showing how many people are affected each year, which helps draw more attention to the issue.
- Balanced: Our recreated version is balanced as it combines a clear title, issue explanation, statistics, and improved visual appeal. This makes the message easier to understand and more effectively communicated.
- Inclusive: This issue is affecting all underprivileged children and also emphasizes that every child deserves a quality education regardless of their background.
- Realistic: The recreated version is realistic because it includes real data about the number of people affected. It also encourages donations in a visually appealing way that can easily capture people's attention.

- Media Sample 2:

1. What will you change and why?

We changed the original PSA into a verbal audio announcement that includes the story of a student struggling with this issue. We made this change because audio can reach a wider audience previously not reached by video, for example radio users, podcast users and drivers who listen to FM, and capture attention more effectively through radio. Furthermore, unlike the original PSA, we added a storytelling component, which makes the message more engaging and impactful.

2. How will your version be more:

- Responsible: Our version is responsible as in audio it is easier to understand the message and also the message is conveyed directly so it is understandable. The problem is clearly stated as a story of many students facing this problem.
- Balanced: The Recreated Version is balanced in such a way that it involves a message with a story of a student who cannot afford education that blends the storytelling with the message.
- Inclusive: It represents a story that is more relatable to many of the children today who have to leave education because of expenses.
- Realistic: Our version is realistic in a way that the story being presented in the radio announcement is the real story of many students but this issue isn't raised too much so through radio it can reach a wider audience.

Part C: Your Recreation

Media Sample 1:

Title of New Version: When Poverty Blocks Knowledge

Describe your recreated media (150 Words):

Our recreated media is a redesigned version of the original billboard on poverty and education. We kept the main image of the child because it effectively shows the emotional impact of poverty on education and helps people understand the issue quickly. We improved the title by making it larger, clearer, and more attention-grabbing. The original small and unclear text was replaced with clear content that explains both the problem and possible solutions, including how people can support underprivileged students. We also added a real statistic from UNICEF to make the billboard more informative and realistic. A donation contact number was included so viewers can respond immediately after seeing the billboard. These changes make our version more effective because it not only raises awareness about how poverty affects children's education, but also encourages people to take action and support students who cannot afford to stay in school.

26 million children aged 5-16 cannot afford schooling in Pakistan (PES-2023)

When Poverty blocks Knowledge

Millions of children across Pakistan are forced to leave school. The reason?

They cannot afford school fees, books, uniforms, or transportation. Many are pushed into child labour to support their families instead of studying, making education an unaffordable dream.

This takes away their childhood, and traps them in a cycle of poverty, preventing them from reaching their true potential.

Education gives children skills, confidence and the strength to attain success for themselves and their communities.

With proper support such as financial aid, and safe learning environments, children can return to school and continue their education.

Title of New Version: Poverty and Education

Describe your recreated media (150 Words):

In our recreated media, we chose a radio announcement. It begins with the story of a student who cannot afford school fees, representing the situation of millions of students who are forced to drop out of school due to financial difficulties. Next, we explain the main problem. Illiteracy is increasing because many capable and intelligent students are leaving school as they cannot afford the expenses of educational institutions. We chose radio as our medium so that the message can reach a larger audience and be easily understood. In addition, we clearly mention how even small efforts from individuals can help make education possible for these children. The audience is encouraged to support such students who are leaving education due to high costs, and they are guided on how they can help them continue their studies and build a better future.

Part D: Reflection

1. How do your versions change the message? (150 words)

Our versions changed the message by making it more accessible, effective, and clearly communicated. In our billboard recreation, we added more content, explicitly explained the problem, included a referral number to actively donate and contribute to, and included statistics showing how many children are affected by this critical issue. We also made the design more visually appealing and easier to read, in contrast to the previous hard to read white split text. For our PSA, we chose a radio announcement because it can reach a different subset of audiences, and is easier to understand. It provides more detail about the problem, its consequences, and possible solutions. By encouraging people to donate and support children who cannot afford education, the message becomes more action-oriented and impactful, helping to promote a brighter future for these students.

2. What impact do you think your versions will have on viewers? (150 words)

We believe our versions will have an overall motivational impact on viewers. This is because, after analyzing the interviews, we observed that regardless of their opinions about the recreated versions compared to the originals, participants felt a stronger urge to help children who are leaving school due to poverty. This shows that our versions helped revive a sense of urgency around the issue. Specifically, in our recreated billboard, the improved visual appeal and readability made it easier to communicate the problem clearly and effectively. In our recreated PSA, we used an audio format because it can reach a wider audience and encourage people to reflect on the issue more deeply. This approach makes the message more engaging and impactful. Overall, by combining visuals, a clear verbal message, and proper explanation of the problem, our recreated media becomes more attention-grabbing and effective in raising awareness and inspiring action.
